Respected Dr. Mohan Khedkar

For the past two years Dr. Syed Khadri, Head of Geology at Amravati University, collaborated with our team of geologists and geochronologists from Princeton University (USA) and the University of Lausanne, Switzerland, on Deccan Trap studies and in particular to conduct high-resolution U-Pb zircon dating of Deccan volcanic eruptions. Our team has been extremely successful to date in obtaining the first U-Pb ages of Deccan basalt flows and the first results have been published in Science (Dec. 2014 and Jan. 2015). This was the first step in what are revolutionary results for high precision Deccan geochronology with far-reaching implications for understanding the nature and tempo of eruptions and gas emissions and their devastating effects globally leading to the mass extinction 65 m.y. ago. In our January 2015 fieldwork we collected a series of samples that have also yielded promising results and also revealed where additional fieldwork is necessary for the next step in this geochronology study, which will result in excellent publications in high-visibility international journals.

For this reason we are planning our next phase of fieldwork for January 15-31, 2016. Dr. Syed Khadri is a critical and necessary member of our international team as he has much experience in Deccan Trap studies and leads our team in fieldwork. I am contacting you once again in the hope that you will grant Dr. Khadri on duty permission to join us in fieldwork as a part of our International Research Collaboration and continue this critically important research project. Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

RE: This letter requests permission for Prof. Syed Khadri to lead fieldwork in the Deccan Traps for an international team of scientists during Jan. 15-31, 2017.

Respected Dr. Muralidhar Chandekar:

I'm Professor Keller at Princeton University contacting you in regards to permission for Professor Syed Khadri, Head of Geology at Amravati University, to participate and lead our ongoing international research collaboration with fieldwork scheduled between Jan. 15-31, 2017. This international research collaboration is between Princeton University and Sant Gadge Baba University and includes: Prof. Syed Khadri, Profs. Gerta Keller and Blair Schone from Princeton University, Dr. Thierry Adatte from the University of Lausanne, Switzerland, Prof. Jahnavi Punekar, Indian Institute of Science Education and Research Pune, Dr. Eric Font, University of Lisbon, Portugal, Dr. Michael Eddy, MIT, Boston, and several graduate students. Professor Syed Khadri is an integral part of our team as well as our team leader in conducting fieldwork because of his extensive expertise in Deccan volcanism.

Background: Our research project is on the Chronology of Deccan Volcanism and concentrates on the most important outstanding problem in Deccan research, namely determining the absolute age, the rate and tempo of basalt eruptions and their cause-and-effect relationship to the mass extinction at the end of the Cretaceous 66 million years ago. We began this project in 2013 and have been fantastically successful in age dating even individual lave eruptions revealing that over 3200 m of lava erupted in about 750,000 years with about 2000 m over just 250,000 years leading up to the mass extinction. This was the first step with revolutionary results for high precision Deccan geochronology with far-reaching implications for understanding the nature and tempo of eruptions and gas emissions and their devastating effects globally. This paper was published in Science January 2015 (Schoene et al) and accompanied by much international publicity. Since then our research has spawned numerous other teams working on Deccan volcanism as well as all other mass extinctions associated with volcanism.

Our research is continuing with even greater success thanks to yearly fieldwork lead by Dr. Syed Khadri. We have now succeeded in even higher resolution U-Pb age dating of Deccan lava flows, which narrows the voluminous lava flows down to the time of eruption that directly ended with the mass extinction (a paper is being prepared for publication in Science or Nature).

But our research is far from over, besides our work in the Western Ghats, we must now concentrate outside this area to evaluate the geographic distribution of lava flows, which is necessary to obtain estimates of the volume and rate of lava eruptions and gas emissions that are critical for modeling the climatic and environmental effects that appear to have caused the mass extinction. Also time is of essence because so many other teams have now embarked on Deccan studies. For these reasons we plan to conduct fieldwork during January 15-31, 2017.

Prof. Syed Khadri is an important member of our scientific team and his participation and extensive knowledge of the Deccan Traps are critical for the success of this project. For these reasons we kindly ask that you may grant permission to Dr. Syed Khadri to participate and lead our fieldwork. Our past successes virtually assure even greater success based on the upcoming fieldwork. It also assures a high visibility role for all participating institutions in this project.

Thank you for your consideration of this request. Sincerely,

Prof. Gerta Keller

Re: Permission for Prof. Dr. S. Khadri to join our fieldwork Feb. 1-Feb. 15, 2018.

Respected Dr. Murlidhar Chandekar

For the past five years Dr. Syed Khadri, Head of Geology at Amravati University, has collaborated with our team of geologists from Princeton University (USA) and the University of Lausanne (Switzerland) on Deccan Trap studies, including high-resolution U-Pb zircon dating of Deccan volcanic eruptions. Our team has been very successful in obtaining the first U-Pb ages of Deccan basalt flows (Schoene et al., 2014, 2015, Science). In subsequent fieldwork we collected many more red boles for dating and this work has also been very successful in adding many new high-precision U-Pb age dates for the Deccan Traps. This work is now being written up for submission to a high-profile journal. This high precision Deccan geochronology will have farreaching implications for understanding the nature and tempo of eruptions, gas emissions and their devastating effects globally leading to the mass extinction at 66 Ma.

Despite the considerable success so far we have not quite hit the jackpot – which is dating the killer lava flows that caused the mass extinction. But we are very close. In fact, we have dated lava flows that are just 60,000 years below the mass extinction. This is why we need to renew our fieldwork with an intensive search for the killer lava flows precisely at the mass extinction horizon now U-Pb dated elsewhere at 66.021±0.024 Ma.

For this reason we are planning our next phase of fieldwork for February 1-15, 2018. Re: Permission for Prof. Dr. S. Khadri to participate in documentary film on Deccan volcanism.

Respected Dr. Murlidhar Chandekar

I write to you to ask your permission for Dr. S. Khadri to participate in a documentary film on Deccan volcanism from October 27 through October 31, 2018.

For the past five years Dr. Syed Khadri, Head of Geology at Amravati University, has been a very important collaborator in my team of geologists from Princeton University (USA) studying the Deccan Traps. These studies have been highly successful and have received major media attention. Thanks to our research, Deccan volcanism as a driver of the dinosaur mass extinction is now of intense interest by several documentary filmmakers in the USA. I have chosen one highly regarded team of NYC filmmakers to create a documentary film on Deccan volcanism highlighting our research advances. This team will accompany my fieldtrip to the Deccan Traps at the end of October 2018.

Participation of Dr. Syed Khadri in this documentary is important because of his critical contributions to the successful research. His participation is also very beneficial for Amravati University as it highlights the important science contributions of one of your faculty members in what is expected to become an outstanding and internationally distributed science documentary on the Deccan Traps and the mass extinction.

Thank you for considering this request.

Sincerely,

Prof. Gerta Keller Department of Geosciences

Subject: - Semester Outreach Programme (SOP) Respected Sir, As you are aware Unnat Bharat Abhiyan is Flagship programme of MHRD that aims to enrich Rural India. It gives modest opportunity for students to get engaged with the community. Few universities have conceptualized more intense programmes for a continuous and longer engagement with community or industry. Today's students are looking for more innovative ways to acquire practical knowledge and problemsolving skills. Communities are great learning platforms. The holistic development of students as envisaged by the NEP requires real life experiences outside the campus as well. There is a need to review all such efforts and construct a new programme so that students can contribute to national and societal development.

University Grants Commission considered a possibility to revise broad framework of undergraduate curriculum to dedicate one semester when students can go out of campus and engage with society. This semester outreach programme can be properly structured and creditized, To conceptualize the concept of Semester Outreach Programme (SOP) as a pilot project, Hon'ble Chairman, UGC has constituted a working group as under:

Concerns: Permission for Prof. Dr. S. Khadri to join our fieldwork Feb. 1-Feb. 12, 2019

Respected Dr. Murlidhar Chandekar

For the past five years Dr. Syed Khadri, Head of Geology at Amravati University, has collaborated with our team of geologists from the University of Lausanne (Switzerland) and Princeton University (USA) on Deccan Trap studies, including high-resolution U-Pb zircon dating of Deccan volcanic eruptions. Our team has been very successful in obtaining the first U-Pb ages of Deccan basalt flows (Schoene et al., Science 2015). In subsequent fieldwork we collected many more red boles for dating and this work has also been very successful in adding many new high-precision U-Pb age dates for the Deccan Traps. This work has been now accepted in the prestigious journal Science. This high precision Deccan geochronology will have far reaching implications for understanding the nature and tempo of eruptions, gas emissions and their devastating effects globally leading to the mass extinction at 66 Ma. In 2018, we have have extended our dataset to the eastern part of Deccan Trap, around Hyderabad, but we still need to complete our dataset in western India (Gujarat). For this reason, we are planning our next phase of fieldwork for February 1-12, 2019. Dr. Syed Khadri is a critical and necessary member of our international team since he has much experience in Deccan Trap studies and leads our team in fieldwork. I am contacting you in the hope that you will grant Dr. Khadri permission to join us in fieldwork and continue this critically important research project.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.
